Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine whether there were differences in the prevalence of risk factors for low back pain between two groups of nurses working in different departments of a tertiary care hospital. A cross-sectional study was conducted among 100 nurses from the intensive care unit (ICU) and 100 nurses from the medical-surgical department. Data were collected by means of a questionnaire that included demographic information, anthropometric measurements, self-reported work-related factors, and the Oswestry Disability Index. Results showed that the prevalence of low back pain was higher among ICU nurses than among medical-surgical nurses. There were no significant differences between the two groups regarding age, gender, height, weight, body mass index, years of experience, or years since graduation. However, there were significant differences between the two groups regarding the prevalence of risk factors for low back pain. ICU nurses had significantly higher prevalence rates for sitting at work, standing at work, lifting and carrying heavy loads, bending over, twisting, and walking long distances. Medical-surgical nurses had significantly higher prevalence rates for reaching overhead and pushing/pulling heavy loads. These results suggest that the prevalence of low back pain is related to the physical demands of the nursing job.
